Chairwoman Stabenow,

We thank you for seeking the National Milk Producers Federation’s (NMPF) input on the MF Global collapse. We offer several comments in response to your letter.

Dairy farmers and dairy processors need risk management choices; but their confidence in the regulated futures and options markets has been shaken by MF Global’s collapse. Some dairy farmers were commodity customers of MF Global; a substantial part of their segregated cash accounts, including their mandatory margin deposits, were improperly taken by their broker. This is unprecedented. Most of these customers are still waiting for the return of 28% of this money. Others in the dairy industry now have justifiable doubts about engaging in regulated risk management.

NMPF agrees with CFTC that Federal statute gives MF Global’s commodity customers first claim on the estate. The broker’s violation of segregation should not change this claim. We appreciate any support from the Chairwoman on this stance.

Going forward, NMPF urges greater accountability and more severe penalties to go along with CFTC’s newly tightened rules. If the cash associated with commodity futures and options accounts is supposed to be segregated and inviolable, then the penalties for violating those accounts must adequately deter the brokers. It appears that MF Global believed the penalties for violating customer accounts would be easier to deal with than their short term cash flow problems. There should never again be a doubt about this: violating these segregated accounts should be treated like the crime that it is, so that farmers and their customers need not fear risk management more than risk itself.

Sincerely,
